Overview of project work and outcomes

Non-technical summary

This project was primarily focused on the dissemination of information contained in the reports of IPCC Working Group II and III and recent findings related to climate change in Sri Lanka. As the issue of climate change is somewhat newborn concept to public in Sri Lanka, it is a pre-requisite to raise the awareness on the overview of the climate change issue before launching any targeted program to reduce or minimize the vulnerability of different sectors of the economy to the climate change. This was accomplished by conducting 25 seminars at many administrative districts of Sri Lanka within a period of 18 months. The composition of the participants in these seminars represented different stakeholders including school teachers and students. A seven hour long seminar was consisted of six presentations at each occasion, out of which one was highly specific to the respective geographical region. Other five presentations included Science of climate change, Impacts, Adaptation and Mitigation to climate change in different sectors (Agriculture, Water resources, and Health) and Extreme climatic events. A panel discussion was held at the end of each seminar and there was a very high response from the participants on various emerging issues. Several Leaflets on climate change issue, which were prepared under the project were distributed among the participants of each seminar. During the last few seminars, a documentary film, which was produced under the project, was also screened.

Objectives

The present project aimed to:

- To raise public awareness on the issue of climate change, in general;
- To educate the public about possible adaptation measures to climate change in different sectors;
- To educate the public, especially, policy makers, private sectors, NGOs and academic experts on the mitigation options.

Amount received and number years supported

The Grant awarded to this project was:

- US$ 21,000 for a period of 20 months (March 31, 2005 to November 30, 2006).

Work undertaken

Twenty five (25) public awareness seminars were conducted. The total number of participants was 3448 with an average of 138 at each seminar representing policy makers, district level administrative, technical officers, private sector representatives, NGOs, school children, teachers and academic experts. Six(6) leaflets on climate change related issues were prepared. One thousand five hundred copies from each were printed and distributed among participants. A documentary film, running for about 30 minutes, named "Kalaguna Aguna" (The adverse effects of Climate Change) was also produced and screened at last several seminars

Results

The major outcome of this project was the creation of awareness on climate change among stakeholders. They can make use the knowledge gathered during the seminars in long-term policymaking and preparedness plans for disasters, development of technical know-how for the future, and development of school & university curriculum. In long-term, it will help to reduce the vulnerability of the economy of the country to any future climate change.

Relevance to the APN CAPaBLE Programme and its Objectives

Raising awareness and dissemination of climate change issues among policy-makers and civil society is one of the primary objectives of the APN-CAPaBLE programme. Hence, the activities carried out under this project are directly relevant to the objectives of APN-CAPaBLE program.

Self evaluation

In general, the expected outcomes of the program were achieved with occasional exemptions. Even though, it was initially planned to hold 18 seminars through out the country, the project was terminated with successful completion of 24 seminars. However, some programmes were not conducted at scheduled times due to interferences from the routine administrative activities (i.e. general election) and compelled to reschedule to some other dates. As a result, some key participants were unable to attend the seminars. Meanwhile, there were large numbers of requests for similar kind of seminars by the stakeholders in their own macro-institutes. It resembles the relevance of the contents of each presentation to respective stakeholders.

Potential for further work

In order to meet immense demand for similar kind of seminars by the stakeholders, specially by the school teachers, planters, and grass root level government officers, another series of seminars can be organized with the financial support of the APN. Computer Aided Learning (CAL) system on Vulnerability, Impacts, Adaptation and Mitigation of Climate Change can be developed specially for school teachers. It can be used as a teaching tool to educate school children more effective manner.

1.0 Introduction

Climate Change is a major environmental threat the world community faces today. Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) was established in 1987 due to the need for an international consensus on global warming issues. Third Assessment Report (TAR) of the IPCC (working groups II and III) discuss the impacts and adaptation of climate change and what measures could be taken to mitigate climate change in global extent.

Since the effect of climate change has been experiencing by the humans in a longer time scale, consequences of these changes are difficult to convince the civil society. The best example for this is the rising of sea level by 0.88 meters by the year 2100 under the highest emission scenario proposed by the IPCC. The people are not prepared to believe this without experiencing themselves. However after the tsunami incident on the 26th December 2004, people are much more vigilant about coastal flooding, inundation, etc. Therefore this project is very effective in creating awareness on climate change and related issues for the civil society, because the people are now prepared themselves to listen about these changes after the devastating event of tsunami.

The subject of climate change has not been directly addressed in almost all the existing policies. However, there are a number of environmental policies, legal enactments and plans. That contains provisions to contribute in reducing or mitigating the effects of climate change. There are also many acts, which deals with the subject areas of climate change. These however have not been effectively implemented due to enforcement weaknesses. General measures that would increase resilience to climate change include -the protection of arable soil, improvement of water management, enhancement of agro-technology, formulation of land use policies, maintenance of food reserves and provision of emergency disaster relief. There is a need for revising existing policies taking into account the climate change impacts.

Sri Lanka is an island, located just south of southern tip of Indian sub continent, having an aerial extent of about 65,610 square kilometres lies between 6 and 10 °N latitudes and between 80 and 82 °E longitudes. It has a long coastline of about 1660 kilometres. The climate of Sri Lanka is conducive to forest growth and the entire land area with a few exceptions was once covered with forests. Over the last century much of this forest cover rich in diversity has been destroyed and today less than 1/3 of the area is under forest. Deforestation has seriously diminished timber supplies, made soils less productive and affected the natural water supply.

Sri Lanka's response strategy to anticipated climate changes includes the implementation of both mitigation and adaptation measures. The country's contribution to the emission of greenhouse gases is considerably negligible. Even so, every effort has to be made to maximize the country's potential contribution towards controlling the amount of gases being emitted to the atmosphere. Though, Sri Lanka has no direct commitment under the Kyoto protocol, Sri Lanka has volunteered to participate in CDM projects (through renewable energy), which in turn gain some foreign exchange to the country.

Adaptation measures are required to develop in minimizing the potential impacts of climate change. A few measures have already been adapted in some sectors such as agriculture and energy to promote improved environmental management. Some adaptation measures have already been identified in the Tea and Coconut sectors in Sri Lanka with the AIACC project (AS-12) funded by the GEF/UNEP/TWAS, which was concluded early this year.

The awareness raising on the overview of the climate change issue as a whole should be a pre-requisite to starting a more targeted programme on any specific subject areas of climate change. Therefore, this project was primarily focused on the dissemination of information contained in the reports of IPCC Working Group II and III, coupled with some key and essential activities to raise public awareness on the general issue of climate change (including the findings of the AIACC project of Sri Lanka - AS-12).

As the first step in meeting these overall objectives of raising awareness, the specific subject areas of technology transfer (adaptation) and mitigation are addressed.

In order to meet aforesaid objectives, awareness programmes are conducted for the benefit of key stakeholders such as policymakers, district level administrative officers, master teachers, university lectures & students, school children, private sector, NGOs, etc.

2. If there are no policies, introduce new policies covering all aspects of climate change in a multi stakeholder consultative process.
3. Take maximum effort to utilize nationally beneficial opportunities from Multilateral Environmental Activities.
4. As a developing country, in making policies, more emphasis on adaptation practices rather than mitigation.
5. Prioritizing the issues in a national context with consideration to sustainable development.
6. Translation of policies in to action, their proper legalization, proper implementation with supervision and follow up action

2.3 General Outcome of seminars

After the seminar, participants took part in discussions, sharing their experiences with respect to their own sectoral issues. Some of the main issues raised at the discussion are given below sector wise.

Agriculture:

Is the breeding program of the agriculture related institutes geared towards drought, salinity, high temperature and pest and disease tolerance?

Is there an increasing trend of soil salinity development of drier regions of the country?

Is there a significant impact of increasing temperature on the country's rice, potato and tomato production?

Are the paddy fields of Sri Lanka emitting Methane?

Is the plantation agriculture sector vulnerable to climate change?

Water resources

Is the country's cascade of tank system prone to rapid drying up due to increasing temperature?

Is there a danger of dam breaching due to climate change?

Will there be deterioration of water quality in surface water due to climate change?

What is the fate of the country's ground water sources under a changing climate?

Health

Will Malaria resurgence occur in the wetter regions of the country in future?

Is the present increasing trend of Dengue fever due to the climate change?

Will there be a impact on nutrition of children and pregnant women due to climate change?

Extreme events

Is the present trend of frequent Tornado occurrence due to climate?.

Is the number of lightning victims increasing due to increased temperature?

Does the southwest monsoon show en erratic nature at present?.

Mitigation (CDM)

Is the Carbon fixation data available for relevant tree species in Sri Lanka?

Is country's newly drafted CDM policy compatible with existing financial and foreign policies?

Is there any hidden agenda behind CDM projects to indirectly acquire the country's rain forests?

In addition, general issues pertaining to the sea level rise, El Nino and Tsunami were raised at most places. Most of the participants were very critique about the mitigation options from the agriculture sector at the expense of production. There was a general consensus about adaptation measures to climate change that have been already proposed in the First National Communication.

3.0 APN-Funded Participants

Not applicable as there was not APN funded participants for this series of seminars.

4.0 Conclusions

Even though possible impacts of climate change on the environment and the society have already been well documented, those information has hardly outreached the public. As a result, vulnerability of the society to the climate change remains unchanged despite significant technological advances. Hence, this project was primarily focused on the dissemination of information generated recently in the field of climate change both locally and internationally.

Having successfully completed 24 seminars throughout the country, it was found that general public is eager to know the latest findings of climate change. It clearly reflects in the statistics of the participants at each seminar, their active participation in the panel discussion and unprecedented requests for similar kind of seminars by macro institutes and NGOs.

The most recent weather extreme experienced in the country, floods and associated landslides have been well handled by the respective authorities with minimum damages to the human being and infrastructure compared to the past events. In general, authorities admit that it was mainly attributed to their updated knowledge on such weather extremes gained through this series of seminar. It has been noticed that fund allocation to disaster preparedness and evacuation activities has been increased during recent times by respective public agencies and NGOs. This could be probably attributed to the attitudinal changes of administrators and policy makers after attending these awareness seminars.

However, it is understood that required information is yet to reach the grass root level of the society where the actions are really taking placed. Hence, there is a timely need to educate the field officers of different sectors including school teachers on Impact, Adaptation and Mitigation of Climate change through a suitable mechanism for which further support of APN is envisaged.
